outbreak of the rebellion, he was following his prefusion in Richanood, and entered heart and soul tabe the great conspiracy against the Government. He accepted as truth the constant enertions of Jeff. Davis that Mr. Lincoln was a tyrants is the will of God. He stadiously educated Minself into this belief and made it the object of his life to compass the assessmation of the President.

He is the embodied result of the teachings of Jeff. Davis and his followers. Where others and Jeff. Davis and his followers. Where others had not the courage to follow, he followed these teachings out to their bloody end. The accuracy institution of shwery with all its concomitants found in him its representative and tool. His is not an holated case. There were hundreds and thousands of men it the Southern States who passessed his principles, who hated liberty as thoroughly as he, who would have perpetrated the same crimes had they had the same never as he. He has shown as the robellion in all its enormity, slavery in all its hideous shapes, and has impressed upon the American people a more deeply stated lostining and hatred for the leaders of this rebellion and the accuracy the proof positive that the terrible the leaders of this rebellion and the accurace testiunton which has gooded them on.

There is proof positive that the terrible deed he has committed was the culmination of a plan lie has cherished ever since the outbreak of the war. A year and a half ago, when he was playing his last rega, ement at McVicker's Theater, in this city, he plainly intimated his desire to be instrumental invinding the country of "the tyrant," but the desire was stiributed to his passionate nature and his love of notoriety, rather than to any belief that he really intended to perpetrate his awful designs.

Like his arben, he was at times grossly addicted to the immoderate use of intoxicating

Like his father, he was at times grossly addicted to the immoderate use of intoxicating hapors. But in this falling he was the creature of his surroundings. White in this city, where he has played several engagements, he was temperate, but in St. Louis, Louisville and Southern cities, he fell in with his Southern friends, and plunged into a wild and reckless course of dissipation. His passions were intence, and he exercised little restraint over them, allowing them dometimes to harry him almost to the very verge of madness and the most reckless desperation. These tests to a licelized extent were raunifosted in his action upon the stage. His characters were invariably those in which were delineated the most powerful and concentrated passions, and these qualities yere brought out and developed with a nervous expression, which at once would convince the student of himan nature that his representations of passion were the representations of his own character, that only a man possessing the worst passions could so closely represent them. Budy alone could never familiarize him so intimately with the delineations of crimes. It was in this. It was a part of his being, and in portraying hierself.

That he was the perperator of this dreadcon to revenge in his life; he cd a human being. His millions of and friends never found but one that was with his excess of lently ness toward public enemies. His encestors, was were conducters, was from Berks county, Penn, to Rockingham, Va., and from themee his grand-father, Abraham, removed with his fautily to Kentucky, and was killed by the Indians in 1784. Thomas Liucoln, the father of Abraham, was born in Virginia, and in 1806 marched Nancy Hanks, also a Virginian. In 1816 he removed with his family to what was them spencer county, Indiana, where Abraham, at the age of eight years, was put to work with m are to austic in Clearing away the forest, and the im years following he was occupied with hard labor on his father's farm. He went to achool at intervals, amounting in the aggregate to about one year, which was all the achool adouation he ever received. In March, 1830, he removed with his father to Magou county, in this State. After a trip to New Orleans on a fall-boat, he became a clerk in a store at New Salem, Memord (then Sangmono) county. On the hexaking out of the Black Hawk war, in 1898, he joined a wolfunteer company, and was elected its Captain. beneath the fiery glance of his eye, and uttered no reply.

There is an explanation of the 4th of March stages which we have not seen in print and it is proper new to be made public. We have it from the tipe of a guntleman in high official position and public esteem, who was in Washington at the time, and is conversant with all the particulars and facts. The following is his viatement: Mr. Johnson, as our readers may remember, was taken ill with typhold forar in January preceding the insugaration, and was brought down to the very verge of the grave. After several week combat with that dangerous disease, he passed the crisis, and began to recover. But his constitution was so badly shattered, that has health improved very slowly. His physicians prescribed stimulants in tim-lied quantities to help his system raily from the ravages of the fever. About a forwinght before the inauguration he wrote a letter to the Fresident, stating that he was unfit to visit Washington; that he was not sufficiently respone to endure the fatige of so long a journer, or to preside over the Senate after arriving there. He suggested whether he could not go before some Judge or magistratic in Nashville and take the oath of office, and avoid the necessity of going to the capital. The Fresident referred the letter to several members of Congress, passed not long previously, rendered it essential for Mr. Johnson to be there on the 4th of March had dislipped. On the morning of the 4th of March he was in the Vice-Fresident's room, lying on a coach. He complained that he did not possess enough strength to perform his part of the ceremonies, to deliver his address, or take his seat as presiding officer. He was advised by some of his friends, the versident's could be accessed only the perform his part of the ceremonies, to delive his address, or take his seat as presiding officer. o reply.

There is an explanation of the 4th of Ma.

just before the ceremonies would begin, as the stimulation would impart to him tem-porary strength to perform his part. Acting on the advice, he drank a glass of brandy; but, in the weak condition of his nerves, it flew to his head, and partially intoxicated him at the moment he was called more to The President and Mrs. Lincoln by the theater until fifteen minutes but, in the weak condition of his serves, it few to his head, and partially intoxicated him at the moment he was catled upon to appear in the chamber. The sequet wa will not repeat. After the adjoint ment of the Senate he relieved to the residence of F. P. Blair, senior, at Silver Springs, and remained under his roof for three weeks, where he recovered much of his former strength and health. No man since the 4th of March can say that he has tasted ardont spirits, and he has solemnly pledged his friends that the public will never again has eause of complaint against him on that score. We hope—a better that he will keep his resolution. When he was in Washington as a Senator it was a temperate man, and previous to his sickness it was never alleged even by his worst encumbes, that he was addicted to it quor. sor, and discharge his ometal duties as rath, finily and fischessly.

THE SOR EVEN OF THE PROPES.

The intelligence of the cruel assussitation of our great and good President felt upon every loyal family in the United States with a force as crushing as the news would be of the murder of the head of the household. The people were stunned—stappened—incredulous. It was too shocking for inamedate belief. Even now it seems more like a fright-fall dream than a reality. Abraham Lincoln was looked up to as the father of his people. His loss is felt as the loss of a father, and the nating mourns its endden bereavement with tears of sorrow and anguish. The news of his assassination will shook the civilized world. His name was a household word, a synonym of all that was good and just, around millions of hearthstones, in countries beyond the seas as well as in his own. His death will cause mankind to excerate the situational liberty and the oppressed and down-trodeen of all lands, had become the embodiment of human freedom, the loving friend of the poor and lowly, the defender of constitutional liberty and the rights of man. His memory will be imperiable in the hearts of the people to the last syllable of recorded time.
